REVISED VERSION - New Quotes and Introduction!!

"Death comes equally to us all, and makes us all equal when it comes" ...John Donne

Death is inevitable. It is the only thing in life that we can be certain of. From the moment we are born, we are dying. Leonardo da Vinci said, 'While I thought I was learning how to live, I have been learning how to die'. The same is true for us all. All of life is a preparation for death. Yet it still often comes as a shock to us, or something we only give last minute thought to, and then we are unprepared for it.

For most of us, dealing with death and dying—our own, or someone else's—is a cause of great suffering. Modern psychology tells us that we are likely to progress through five stages of grief: denial, anger, bargaining, depression, and acceptance. But it can take a very long, painful time to come to the acceptance stage, and we usually need help and support to get there.

It is very common for those who are experiencing loss to turn to God or to question God, looking for help or looking for answers. Most of us don't really fully understand death, and so we look to a spiritual source for help, for it is only in the realm of spirit that we can truly find understanding and comfort.

On Death and Dying is a compilation of inspirational verses taken from the Old and New Testament, as well as other Christian and non-Christian spiritual sources to provide you with the understanding and comfort that you seek.

Leonardo da Vinci also said that, 'Our life is made by the death of others.' The death of someone we love inspires us to live fully and love fully, to truly understand what this means—that is their gift to us, and it is how we honour them. It is the gift we will give when our time comes to die, happy and unafraid.

It is my hope that this little publication will help you all, when death comes, to be happy and unafraid.
