Kaye Long's life turned upside down one sunny day in 2002 when her mother, just fifty-four, suffered a massive stroke. Within two and a half weeks, both her mother and grandmother were dead, and Kaye was suddenly the family matriarch. Her mother, an award-winning reading teacher and director of music at their church for thirty years, was gone, and everyone looked to her oldest daughter for comfort, strength, and inspiration.

Kaye was strong and responsible on the outside, arranging the funeral details and assuring loved ones that her mother and grandmother were in a better place-but on the inside, she was falling apart. Focused on helping others, she repressed her own grief and anxiety. Rather than drawing them closer to each other, the loss strained the family. Why had God laid such a burden on them? A lifelong Christian and musician, Kaye was even tempted to stop going to her church, in hopes of avoiding the pain.

How could Kaye carry on the legacy of this beloved and successful woman? What about her own gifts? Where did they fit? Supported by scripture and help from authors such as James Dobson and Rick Warren, Kaye was able to journey step by step through the tragedy and discern God's plan for her. Those who wonder where God is in the wake of loss will find solace and hope in her story.
