Nicholas Twit is almost 11 and works as a consulting detective for Basket Case Investigations. Nick is crazy about Sherlock Holmes, knows most of his methods and uses them to solve mysteries. And if Nicholas is a young, modern-day Holmes then Felicity, 13, is a modern-day Dr Watson. They argue a lot. They battle to see who can be the top detective and they manage to solve most of their cases. In this book, Felicity has some serious personal problems. Her father's girlfriend is missing presumed dead and Flick's dad is in the frame. Can Felicity help her father? And in the meantime Nick gets a really silly case of stolen roses. Ah but it involves two ladies of the theatre and boy can they act. One of the women has some rotten food and cobwebs on her dining-room table as she's mad about Charles Dickens-or is she just mad? But things hit overdrive when Nick 'n Flick get involved with a would-be terrorist at a major sporting event. Nick discovers schizophrenia and learns heaps. But suddenly it looks to be all over for the Schoolboy Sherlock Holmes. He gets tricked into saying he saw a ghost when it was a set-up, a sting to catch him out. How can the boy detective survive?
